Statement of interest

Education to Dialogue is one of the main goals of an educational system that aims at promoting non-violent, inclusive, and participative societies, and therefore the educational relationship embodies the dialogical attitude as its basic element. There is an evidence of urgent request for operative models to promote a dialogical attitude in educators by means of theoretically-grounded programs for Teacher Education (TE); the dialogical attitude promotes in turn a healthy educational relationship, that is the basis for an efficient learning process. My study aims at responding to the educational needs of the post-modern individual by highlighting the necessary relational-existential skills as pre-requisites for any successful learning process. It prefigures a person-centred style of teaching, in line with the modern scientific debate on the subject. It aims at supporting teachers by promoting a dialogical attitude and at achieving the optimization of the educational relationship, in order to facilitate the learning process and the healthy development of the pupils' personality. The Educational sector of Eric Berne's Transactional Analysis is grounded on solid philosophical bases and demonstrates, also on the basis of
