Present appointment

- Junior Researcher (RTDa) in Agricultural Economics
- Start: 15.02.2022
- Level of appointment (in national / international context): Assistant Professor
- employer (University, research institute, status of university / institute): Free University of Bolzano
- brief description of responsibilities: Teaching: Enogastronomic Tourism and Sustainable Tourism Development; Research:

The research activity analyses strategies and interactions between agriculture and the tourism sector. It addresses how actors in agriculture and tourism can design and implement sustainable organizational and managerial solutions to invigorate the competitiveness of the regional agri-food sector. The aim is to propose a menu of effective solutions to interact with the tourism sector and to exploit existing synergies. These solutions identify innovative ideas and management processes within and between sectoral boundaries, governance, and marketing strategies to generate valuable competitive economic benefits and adaptations to the regulatory and institutional environment to improve the competitiveness and the potential of positive external effects between the agriculture and tourism.

Statement of interest

Candidates should outline reflexively their expected contribution to the advertised position at the unibz and to the university overall. This statement should highlight relevant elements of the candidate's CV that underline the particular suitability of the applicant.

As Junior University Researcher at the faculty of economics and management I will contribute my knowledge of agricultural, food and wine economics. My research will focuss on the role of consumers and factors that influence the transformation of consumption behaviour towards sustainability.

One focus of my studies will be on innovative methods from behavioural economics. The focus will be on non-invasive interventions, so-called "nudges", that rely on automatic decision-making processes. A second focus will be set on internal, psychological processes (values, beliefs and attitudes) that motivate consumers to purchase sustainable products. A significant proportion of consumers have positive attitudes regarding sustainable food, i.e. they state that they attach great importance to the environmental and health impacts of food. However, purchase levels are low. This shows that the analysis of actual behaviour is crucial in identifying barriers that cause this so-called attitude-behaviour gap. So far, most studies on sustainable consumer behaviour directly asked consumers on their attitudes or purchase intentions. Results of such studies are prone to social-desirability biases. Therefore, upcoming research projects will focus on the following innovative research methods:

- Household panel studies examine real market data combined with many psychological and demographic characteristics thus enabling the study of the attitude-behaviour gap and its conditions.
- Field experiments / real life intervention studies permitting to test the effects of policy and marketing measures (e.g. pricing and communication) on consumers' real purchase behaviour (e. g. in store or at restaurants/canteens).

In this way my research will contribute to questions of sustainable development in the field of agricultural production (particularly wine production) and rural development in interaction with tourism.
