SELECTION PROCEDURES

for

four posts of
JUNIOR UNIVERSITY RESEARCHER with fixed-term CONTRACT

Rector's decree of 27.11.2015,
no. 219/2015

Area of research or title of the research project: "Setting up of a Laboratory for safety, innovation and certification of equipment and materials for Agro-Forestry Applications In Alpine Environments, that is going to be established in the framework of the Programmatic- and Financial-Convention - signed between the Autonomous Province of Bolzano and the Free University of Bolzano - aiming at the development of the Technological Research".

The academic discipline that is object of this call concerns all the applications of mechanics and mechanization in agricultural and forestry enterprises performing, in different ways, productive processes or services (both in a mobile or a fixed form) on more or less wide portions of lands, thus having impacts both on the quality of primary production and on the environment that characterizes the lands themselves.

Therefore, the domain of this discipline includes all the processes characterizing farming, livestock and forestry bio-systems, comprising the management of green areas, as well as agro-food and wood-processing industries. All these topics are afforded with a particular emphasis on the design and constructive aspects of these systems, as well as on their operational, functional, managerial, environmental aspects, including also the safety and the comfort of workers.

Related applications of information technologies are a consistent part of the discipline, especially with regard to sensors, automation, robotics and field-management following the site-specific approaches typical of the precision agriculture techniques. Also modelling of processes can here play fundamental methodological roles in defining suitable forms of information management (including the automation of operational and productive monitoring processes of mechanized activities), as well as in the process planning and in the analysis of the logistics of the different productive chains.

Due to the peculiarity of the local territory, some specific aspects of the discipline can include: the design, the selection and the use of power-unit and implement machines suitable to be operated in extreme mountain environments; the machinery and the general equipment for vineyards and orchards, with particular regard to the solutions for harvesting and performing plant-health treatments; the automation of processes aimed at minimizing the risks for farmers in dangerous situations; the design and the study of solutions for achieving higher levels of comfort and safety of agricultural workers; the machines and installations for processing and recovery animal wastes, agro-industrial and forest by-products as well as for the production, the conversion, the utilization and the saving of energy required in the production systems used in the agro-food and forestry industries, including non-conventional (renewable) energy sources.

The position open in this call will support the aforesaid research lines within the activities of the Laboratory For Safety, Innovation And Certification Of Equipment And Materials For Agro-Forestry Applications In Alpine Environments, that is going to be established in the framework of the Programmatic- and Financial-Convention - signed between the Autonomous Province of Bolzano and the Free University of Bolzano - aiming at the development of the Technological Research.

Research activity: The candidate will carry out research in the specified scientific sector (AGR/09), according to the above mentioned indications.

All this, developing a particular propensity to issues of mountain environments focusing on aspects concerning: i) the development of technology solutions that are appropriate to ensure adequate standards of safety and comfort to the operators of the sector, including a strong specialization towards the production contexts in sloping areas, offering unprecedented standard test conditions for agricultural vehicles to be primarily used in such environments, ii) the creation of new prototypes, designed to implement product- or process- innovations (either radical, or incremental) within the sector, iii) the promotion of technology transfer activities across multiple sectors, including application areas normally independent of each other: from winter industry to agri-forestry solutions, or vice versa.
