Title of research project: Methane emissions from lakes in the Alpine region

Description of the research activity:
The aim of the project is to quantify methane emissions of several natural and man made lakes at different elevations along a 2 degree latitudinal transect from the Trentino (Italy) over South Tyrol (Italy) to North Tyrol (Austria), using the eddy covariance method and newly available open-path methane analysers that are expected to yield high-quality, spatially representative methane emission estimates at sub-diurnal to seasonal time scales. Eddy covariance methane flux data acquisition will be accompanied by measurements of a suite of potential driving forces that allow causal interpretation of flux data. Finally, the resulting data will be used to up-scale lake methane emissions to the entire Alpine region using a statistical approach.

Title of research project: Recovery of Functional Ingredients from Food Wastes.

Description of the research activity: Food waste is produced from a variety of sources, ranging from agricultural to household consumption. About 38% of food waste occurs during food transfusion. At present, EU legislation encourages the exploitation of processing waste. This can be achieved by extracting high-value components such as proteins, polysaccharides, fibers, aromatic and phytochemical compounds, which can be reused as functional and nutritional ingredients. The extraction can be carried out by solid-liquid extractors such as extraction with Soxhlet, extraction under pressure, extraction with supercritical fluids, ultrasonic extraction, micro-extraction with extraction by pulsed electrical fields and enzymatic extraction. However, these techniques cannot be used indiscriminately and their choice depends on the type of biomolecules and matrix, the ratio between production costs and the economic values of the compounds to be extracted. Plant waste includes pulp, skins, stems, seeds, bran, residues left after extraction of oil, starch, sugar and juice. Waste from animals includes skin, bones and wastes from dairy processes. This project aims to extract biomolecules from food wastes and to transform such biomolecules into functional foods, ingredients and additives for food processing.

Minimum curricular requirements necessary in order to carry out the research with details of the scientific and professional profile required for research activity:
Master degree with a thesis dealing with Food Science, Food Chemistry or Food Engineering.
Scientific Profile: Proven experience on the extraction of biomolecules, on the chemical and physical characterization of food products and use of calorimetric techniques, Infrared sensors, and chemical analysis of volatile compounds (VOCs) by mass spectrometers is required. A proven experience in validating analytical methods is required.

Title of research project: Experimental analysis and modelling of liquid desiccant dehumidification to small-scale mechanical ventilation systems

Description of the research activity: The researcher will investigate, through both modelling and experimental methods, the potential of dehumidification by means of liquid desiccant devices in mechanical ventilation systems, analysing the impact of different boundary conditions (climate and building use) and system configurations on both energy and economic performances. The researcher will complete a liquid desiccant system, as well as monitoring and control systems, to connect with the test rig for air heat recovery available at FUB building physics laboratory. Description of the research activity:
Within the research area "INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING & AUTOMATION (IEA)" the theme "Industry 4.0" represents an important element. Based on the smart-mini-factory laboratory the research project aims to develop a software prototype for intelligent Shop Floor Management using Industry 4.0 technologies. In a first step creative workshops with the industrial project partners as well as other local companies support the collection of user requirements. Using Axiomatic Design methodology this requirements will be derived into functional requirements and design parameters. Based on these results, a concept of a software for Smart Shopfloor Management should be elaborated identifying a list of possible functionalities. In the last step the software prototype is developed, implemented and tested in the smart mini factory lab. Finally further tests can be executed together with industrial partners in a real industrial environment.
