Description of the tendered didactic activity: The practice-based and transdisciplinary Master in Eco-Social Design is an educational framework for designers who aim to contribute to more sustainable, resilient and fair futures. It supports students in developing their reflective practice by introducing students to challenges, partners, knowledges, instruments and strategies from diverse fields, which they draw together in their autonomous projects.

Project 1 is a full-immersion into thinking and doing eco-social design. Students are confronted with a local context, its issues, partners and roughly defined general aims. Within this frame, they develop projects in small teams – from project definition to prototyping. Project 1 is led by a team of teachers: two design practitioners, covering the areas Objects–Spaces–Services and Communication–Interaction–Services. They closely collaborate with the teacher of the course in Design Research, and with the project assistants.

The project assistants support the students in practically developing their projects. They help the teaching team in the organization of the lectures, workshops, excursions, exhibitions and other events. They work on narrative development of the students's projects and their dissemination via web and social media, regional and international press. The presence of the project assistants at the Faculty in Bolzano is requested at least on three days of the week (usually Monday-Wednesday).

The Free University of Bozen/Bolzano reserves the right to defer the above-mentioned semesters for organizational reasons.*
